

"Shouldn't we seek a "Great" Congressman?"

By Clint Moore, Republican Candidate for Congress - 2nd District

What does it take to be a "great" Congressman? A great Congressman will have high moral character, honor, and integrity. Of equal importance, they will have strong conservative principles and values, as well as the courage, dedication, and discipline to stand for them. Perhaps most importantly, they will have a deep abiding respect for God, Country, Faith, Family, Freedom, and the wisdom of our Founding Fathers and the Constitution that they gave us.

A truly great Congressman will improve the lives of his fellow citizens and our families by authoring and voting for legislation that protects and attracts jobs, businesses and economic opportunity to America and our district; that protects and helps families, children, and the elderly; and by building a stronger national defense & homeland security for America. Perhaps above all, a truly great Congressman will enhance every citizen's ability to achieve their own American Dream.

Whether it's helping constituents solve problems, or championing major economic, security or social legislation, a great Congressman will need to have a broad background of knowledge from many and diverse experiences in the real world.

I believe that I am the best candidate for Congress in this race, because no other candidate brings my 25 years of experience in the worlds of business, industry, science, technology, politics, and government, to this office. For over 25 years here at home in our community, I have consistently been a champion of conservative principles and values, and walked the talk of leadership and character many times, as we should ask of our next Congressman.

I now seek your support so that together, we can build a Nation that will endure for countless generations to come, that is worthy of God's continued blessing, and that will always be the best hope of all mankind.
